While reading Winnie the Pooh: Pugmarks

- Pugmark is the term used to refer to the footprint of most animals.
- Wildlife conservationists are known to catalogue pugmarks in the areas they operate.
- Pugmarks are also used for tracking rogue animals which may be a danger to mankind or even to themselves because of injuries etc.
- It is possible to make an accurate identification of species, sex, age and physical condition of an animal by those trained in the field.
- In India, 'Pugmark Tracking' involves collection of pugmark tracings and plaster casts from the field and analysis of these separately for individual male, female, and cub of tiger and leopard, and their diagnostic track dimensions and spatial distribution.

While reading Letters from a Father to a Daughter: Cave paintings

After visiting the Altamira cave paintings in northern Spain, Pablo Picasso famously exclaimed “after Altamira, all is decadence”.

- Discovered in the late 19th century, the Altamira Cave in northern Spain was the first cave in which prehistoric paintings were discovered. The paintings were of such an astounding quality that the scientific society doubted their authenticity and even accused its discoverer Marcelino Sanz de Sautuola of forgery.
- Many people simply did not believe prehistoric man had the intellectual capacity to produce any kind of artistic expression. It was not until 1902 when the paintings were acknowledged as genuine. The charcoal and ochre images of horses, bison and handprints in the Altamira Cave are among the best preserved cave paintings in the world.
